A NOTE ABOUT THE MIBYs:

The MIBY listings are a vital reference for those aspiring to erudition. It is the only listing of its kind on the internet. Extensive research went into compiling the listings. I personally learned a tremendous amount from the experience, and pray that others will benefit as I have. The selections are the (provisional) result of a meticulous, on-going process of judicious assessment.

The collection represents the most valuable publications for the general audience—each year. The idea is that, by referring to the MIBYs, people will become better aware of what their time is best spent reading...whenever they decide they want to read something edifying. Instead of doing the time-consuming legwork, much of the evaluation process has been done for them. Not all of us have well-read friends, and therefore have no convenient way to ascertain what's really good and what's not.

Our society currently exhibits many of its dysfunctions as a direct result of a horribly misinformed general populace. Most people in this country know very little about important issues. Many Americans have an abysmal understanding of the most crucial matters of our day. This sad state of affairs is largely attributable to the fact that, instead of devoting time to reading important works, most of us occupy our leisure time with less productive activities. (Instead of reading a MIBY, we're too busy watching morning talk shows, daytime talk shows, Reality TV, and MSM...or we're on Facebook.)

Of course, we all need a little fluff now and then. The problem arises when fluff is ALL we ever read. And that is precisely all that most people ever read. Take a look around: When Americans DO opt to read "non-fiction", we typically gravitate toward enticing propaganda, our favorite political pundit, our friend's blog, alluring self-help pulp, vacuous commentary, scandal rags, tabloid papers, or provocative gossip magazines. The more vacuous, the more scandalous, the more vapid, the better. So long as it's mindless and amusing, we'll eat it up. Why bother exerting cognitive effort when there are all these other convenient alternatives?

Plus: Who's to say what, exactly, the really great books are, anyway? I'll stick with my friends' recommendations, thank you very much. All this suits a mentally lethargic, intellectually sclerotic audience splendidly. We consume our media like we consume our food: tasty junk. We've become a nation of thoroughly entertained idiots. We need a jolt—and the MIBYs is just what the doctor ordered. The MIBY listings are a desperately needed public service that few institutions have the motivation to provide.

The need for the MIBYs arises from the simple fact that MSM has not—and most likely never will—provide such an important public service. Commercial media, being in the business of maximizing profit, has no incentive to offer such a resource. It has nothing to gain from doing so. (After all, a mindless target audience is the easiest to cater to. So why tamper with it?) Maximizing edification is not the ideal way to maximize readership / traffic.

People don't want to be informed, they want to be amused. In this culture, edification doesn't sell. So we spend our time with short-term gratifications while remaining stupendously ignorant—unconcerned with the things that matter most. But things don't have to stay that way. Some of us only need a nudge—something that might point us in the right direction.

MSM is corporate in nature, and thus has only one concern: generating as much revenue as possible. MSM (including TV and radio programming, periodicals, and imprints) is hyper-commercialized in order to accommodate the hyper-consumerist culture in which we currently live. Consequently, it will simply cater to the LCD—and thereby re-enforce it. A vicious cycle ensues.

The implication here is straight-forward: MSM will do ANYTHING for ratings / book sales...and will therefore prostitute itself to ANYTHING that caters to the LCD—regardless of the material's merit. Social responsibility is not taken into account. A media company benefits nothing from a better-informed citizenry. Groupthink works so much better when a company is only concerned with peddling a product to as many people as possible. Quantity over quality means more money.

And so it goes: Mass-market appeal, not merit, is the name of the game. As a result of this logic, the popular fair is reduced to the most inane, irrelevant and insipid material the world has seen since the inauguration of the printing press. Trash pulp sells like hotcakes—even as some of the greatest works of the decade pass unknown, collecting dust on a shelf in back of the store.

Meanwhile, there is a vested interest in keeping the hoi polloi ill-informed. (After all, an un-informed rabble is an easily manipulated rabble.) Preventing the hoi polloi from becoming too well-informed keeps them ripe for exploitation.

Let's say you want to keep too many people from acquiring too much knowledge. Let's say you don't want the rabble reading too many good books. Of course, keeping information from them can't be done overtly. (Books can't be banned, lest one draw attention to them.) So what's the alternative in a democracy—where at least the illusion of free speech must be maintained? If you can't ban the good books outright, you can simply engulf them in a mountain of trash pulp. (In order to prevent people from becoming privy to key information, you can either ensor key data...or you can drown the key data in an ocean of junk data.) Welcome to the world of publication: One need only survey the local bookstore on the best-seller lists on Amazon to behold this vast ocean of junk. Good luck finding the gems.

Moreover, one can introduce enticing diversions into the mix (so as to keep most people preoccupied with "other" things). A thoroughly distracted rabble is just as dupable as a rabble that is prevented from seeing things. In fact, the ruse is all the more potent because it preserves the illusion of being fully informed. An ocean of alluring distractions makes it very unlikely that any heed will be paid to the few gems.

The MIBYs are a resource that can counteract this debilitating effect.

The thoroughly-distracted rabble, we find, is none the wiser—blissfully ignorant—oblivious to their obliviousness...unless a light it shone on the gems...unless the key sources of knowledge are brought to their attention. That is the aim of the MIBYs.

Meanwhile, what does MSM offer us? Whatever SELLS. It is no surprise, then, that celebrity charlatans rule the roost—whether in the form of mystical self-help balderdash or right-wing propaganda-mongers. (If we took away all the charlatanry from the local bookstore, half the bookshelves would be bare...and the best-seller lists would go almost blank.) Bookstores push what publishing houses PAY them to push. Promotion is based exclusively on commercial viability.

The goal of the MIBYs is to counteract this degenerate trend. If enough people pay attention to the MIBYs, perhaps this sad state of affairs will change. The MIBYs are a guide to the publications (each year) that are most worth our time and attention—books that are “must reads” for anyone seeking to become well informed. The intent is to provide an important resource for those seeking an profound understanding of our world.

This is a resource our society sorely needs—but heretofore hasn’t had.

The hope is that doing this will remedy the egregious dysfunctions that currently afflict our culture. Making people aware of what’s IMPORTANT to read is a start. Getting people interested in reading worthwhile publications is the first step in altering the present state of our society. People WANT to be “in the know”—they are often just woefully misled. It is possible to facilitate mass-edification. There is no better way to do this than to point people in the right direction...and let them do the rest.

A GUIDE TO THE MIBYs:

This may serve as a syllabus for the autodidact who is aspiring to be well informed in a particular area. The guide is organized—roughly—by topic.

(This listing pertains only to books published during the first decade of the 21st Century: 2001-2010.)

The 100 “Top 10” selections are listed first, in bold—in order of publication.

The 140 “Honorable Mentions” are in regular script—in order of publication.

Non-MIBYs (from 2000-2010) are listed last, in italics—in order of publication. For the respective topics, these are important books as well.

If these had been the new books that people were talking about around the water cooler during the past decade, we’d now be living in a better-educated country.
